"I did very well in the Eighties and, although I enjoyed it, it was much more about being dressed up as somebody else and having someone else's projections put upon you," says Cecilia Chancellor. "Suddenly, in the early Nineties, people wanted to photograph me as myself. I'd got to my mid-twenties and I felt more in control and that coincided with people wanting me to express who I was, rather than have me decked out in frilly things. I remember feeling a bit insecure about being made to spin and spin in those more Eighties-style shoots"
